Angela Walschinski, account assistant at Leonard & Finco Public Relations, Inc., is someone to keep your eye on. Since graduating from college less than two years ago Walschinski has been making her mark in her profession and the community.

Described by Susan Finco, president and owner of Leonard & Finco Public Relations, Inc., as smart, funny and driven to meet and exceed goals, Walschinski is also passionate about her profession and the community. The first to volunteer for new assignments or learn about the business community, Walschinski accepts all assignments and responsibilities with enthusiasm. She applies her public relations education to real world situations. With finely tuned instincts, no challenge is too big for her.

Walschinski has an unmistakable spark that employers dream about seeing in their employees. Still a fresh face to the industry she doesn't let her inexperience hold her back. She has a positive attitude that draws people to her; her energy is contagious.

Walschinski was the volunteer logistics coordinator and grant writer for "A Pair & A Spare: Brown County's Undercover Challenge," an annual collection of new undergarments for those in need in Brown County. Writing the grant application and coordinating the details to pull off a month-long collection was no small task. Thanks to her involvement the collection was able to purchase thousands of socks and underwear for area homeless shelters.

As a member of Current, a young professional organization, and the local Public Relations Society of America chapter the clever assistant is building her network and expanding her knowledge base. Finco says, "Just being involved is a great first step to making an impact in the community and her industry."
